UNDER TWO FLAGS

Andrew Carnegie was somewhat at a loss to know what flag to select to float over Skibo castle. It is said that he feared displeasing his British neighbors if he unfurled the Stars and Stripes. "But," he reflected, "I am American and why not?" Then he thought again and realized that he would please his American friends if he put up the British flag. As a compromise he had a special piece of bunting made, one side being the Stars and Stripes and the other the Union Jack. He now reads easily, feeling that he has honored both nations. It will be remembered that this man who has donated a dual flag over Skibo castle some months ago said that the business world doesn't "care a fig for a flag," and this seems to indicate that such is his own conviction since he only sought to please neighbors on the one hand and friends on the other. It is a pity that the custom of floating a banner over castles made necessary his having a special flag manufactured to serve the double purpose.

THE STROKE OF THE AXE

The action of the chief executive of Pennsylvania in dealing with the appropriations furnishes interesting material for study. It is difficult to discover any rule of action used as a guide in his chopping one-fifth from the amount recommended by the legislature. That recommendations beyond the state's resources were made is conceded by many and it was, therefore, the duty of the governor to reduce the amount. He seems to have gone to work with a lately-ground axe, mindful of the whole of two things—that historical societies must be encouraged and that he had an illustrious cousin—"greater than Webster or Clay"—whose name should be perpetuated. The appeals of many hospitals that plead for quarters and equipment were not heard; the much needed extensions of asylums for the insane were denied; the modest request for $3,000 to mark the resting place of Molly Pitcher, the heroine of the battle of Monmouth could not be granted; the state could not afford to give $5,000 for a monument to General Grier; $10,000 could not be spared to mark the resting place of that son of Montgomery county who distinguished himself on the field at Gettysburg, General Hancock; neither could that amount be given to mark the grave of General Hartsuff nor of ex-Governor Pollock. Despite the fact that no funds could be given to all these causes $20,000 was found to erect in Capital park at Harrisburg a monument to Matthew Stanley Quay, soldier, statesman and cousin of the governor.

Quay was the governor's ideal. He saw in him qualities to admire, to worship. When it was suggested to call a new public school in Philadelphia "The Matthew Stanley Quay School" the governor is reported to have said: "It would be a wise thing to name the new school after Senator Quay." Senator Quay was for years Pennsylvania's most prominent citizen. * * * I know of no man who better represented Pennsylvania than Senator Quay, and to name a school for him would be most fitting.

When Capital park shall have grown to proportions such as shall require a guide to explain to visitors the various attractions we can imagine this worthy, standing before the polished marble and addressing a body of students: "Young men the appropriation for this statue was made by the Pennsylvania legislature during the winter of 1894-5 and the bill was approved by Samuel W. Pennypacker, a cousin of the illustrious man whose name you see chiseled in the granite. 'He was a greater man than Webster or Clay.'" He was the master spirit in Pennsylvania politics for many years; dictated who should and who should not be nominated and elected to office, designated which bills should be passed by the legislature and signed by the governor and which should not. His power to secure campaign funds from corporations was marvellous. He was not a voluminous writer but was the author of the famous note: "Dear Beaver, don't talk." He also wrote the immortal telegram to John S. Hopkins: "If you buy and carry a thousand Met. for me I will shake the plum tree." He dealt rather extensively in stocks and is said to have had access to the state's funds in these dealings. He also wrote a letter to Cashier Hopkins concerning 1,000 shares of sugar directing him to pay for same and 'take over to the People's.' For this dealing he was tried before a court of justice. The trial lasted nine days, during which he was very calm. When the district at-

NAN PATTERSON'S TRIAL.

The Position of Foreman—Use and Misuse of Compromise—The Equitable Trouble—The President's Return.

Special Correspondence to THE GAZETTE.

New York, May 19.—The absorbing feature of the week just past eclipsing all others, civil or criminal, has been the romantic close of the third trial for murder, of Nan Patterson. The interest manifested was not confined to the Greater New York; it reached every portion of our state from Chautauque to Montauk and from Bar Harbor to the Mexican gulf, now that the battle is over we can sit down and ask ourselves, why is this? A very brief statement of the facts might cover the whole ground; Oscar Young, a race-course gambler, not of particularly respectable character, abandoned a good wife and child, and it is said, laid out on a woman of questionable character, the sum of fifty thousand dollars. The woman in question was young and pretty and not over-cleverly morally; any man who could furnish her with money to gratify her desires would have done just as well as Oscar Young, the man whom she is said to have murdered. The crime was committed in open day, sitting in a cab and any number of people passing by might have seen the tragedy enacted, and the question to be decided was, did Nan Patterson shoot Oscar Young, or did he commit suicide? Eleven obstinate jurors, after a careful review of the evidence, decided that Nan Patterson was guilty of murder, but there was one clear-headed juror: wiser than all the rest, who informed Recorder Giff that no agreement was not possible. The prosecution was as bitter as gall but on the whole eminently just. Mr. Rand performed his up-to-date duty like a faithful public officer; his course was dictated by the hard granite facts of the case. When it was known that Nan Patterson might possibly be released on bail, fifty thousand dollars could have been raised on the spot by Mr. Levy the counsel who defended her. But let it pass, the trial is ended and Nan Patterson is free.

May 6 was a red letter day for our police; five thousand two hundred men of unequalled physique were reviewed by the Mayor and Commissioner McGowan and a far better man than our police, which have been justly christened "The Finest" cannot be found in any great city in the world. One of the most interesting features of the parade was the distribution of the gold medals to the men who had distinguished themselves by some act of bravery in the year just past. Two of the noblest acts recorded were those of Frederick J. Wilday and Daniel J. Sullivan. A man named Campbell Glover, intent on suicide jumped into the Harlem river. He could not swim and Policeman Sullivan in his uniform jumped into the river to his rescue. The man, intent on taking his life, fought like a tiger and Policeman Sullivan fought all the way (one hundred and fifty feet) to the shore and in dragging the man up, scratched his hands against a rusty nail in a plank; blood poisoning set in, and the heroic policeman who took the gold medal was lying in the hospital while the parade was going on.

In the evening a number of our police dined at the Waldorf-Astoria and the magnificent room in which they were dining was splendidly festooned for the occasion and the appetites of the diners were satisfied with a feast that would have challenged the diners of Lucullus. I came to the conclusion that it was no bad thing to be a policeman in New York. There was not a man at the dinner but that was richer than John D. Rockefeller or Russell Sage; Mr. Rockefeller or Russell Sage, who has given away one hundred and thirty millions of dollars, has any more than that, and hardly one of them as much! If it is a choice, make me a policeman, lead me on the pension list with much to get and nothing to do, and I would be satisfied to live in this world till the bell rings.

There has been trouble at headquarters, where Mayor McClellan holds court, about the reduction of the cost of gas to private consumers. With the present combination of the gas and electric companies the dividends are said to be seventeen per cent. The engineer who has charge of the gas department of the city of London visited several of our large cities some years ago and on his visit to the city of Brooklyn he was said to have declared that gas could be made, profitably, at fifty cents per thousand.

Man's Conception of God Changes—Prayer is not a Pious Plod—The Place of Cereals.

Special Correspondence to THE GAZETTE.

CINCINNATI, O., May 15.—At the Vine Street Congregational church, the pastor, Rev. Herbert S. Bigelow, yesterday chided a text from Genesis: "The Lord God, walking in the garden in the cool of the day." Mr. Bigelow said in part:

It is said that God is the same yesterday, today, and forever. Yet there is a vast difference between the God of Genesis and the God of today. The gods of old felt hunger and fatigue and cold, received wounds and suffered disease like the poorest of mortals. They had their exploits, their wars and their love affairs, their triumphs and defeats, as the manner of men. It appears that the Lord God of Genesis was not infrequently to the heat of the sun and preferred to walk in the garden in the cool of the day.

GOD NEVER THE SAME

Today, who would think of picturing God with a 'gar and a parasol? Our God is in no danger from astrologers. God is a spirit. He may be eternally the same, yet man's conception of him from age to age changes as man changes, so that God, man's God, is never the same. Man's last thought is probably nearest the truth.

NOT A CITY-PAID POLITICIAN

Since our idea of God has changed, our idea of prayer has necessarily been modified. If we pray for success in business or for the restoration of a sick child, or for victory in battle, or for deliverance from the storm, we are conscious of inconsistency. God is not a city-bail politician. Let us not seek to cajole or flatter him into granting us special favors. Prayer is not a pious plod. We must treat the ruler of the universe with respect. We must assume that the means to give relief are at hand and that we must take the universe as we find it, and instead of praying for immunity from its laws, we must seek to know and obey those laws, that we may find life a blessing and not a curse.

NOT FOND OF ADULATION

Our idea of worship is being modified by a better thought of God. A father who had suffered reverses in business recently reproached his son for not being more faithful in his attendance at church. He thought this explained their failure. He evidently thought God was excessively fond of adulation and likely to grow resentful if men did not come together in a certain place on stated occasions and sing songs to him and tell him how much they love him.

NOT MONOPOLIZED BY ANY PEOPLE

As a better thought of God takes hold of us, our missionary zeal must take a different direction. It is after all so very important to convert the followers of Buddha and Confucius to the doctrine of John Calvin? God is the father of all. Confucius is his voice in man. He is the willing guest of every human heart. Wherever there is love, wherever there is true spirit, there is God. He has left no people without a witness to him. It is monstrous to think that he would give to any a monopoly of his favor. All the prophets of good are his accredited ministers, and the evangel of unity and brotherhood is the true missionary to the nations.

NOT LOST WITH THE CREEDS

God call the nations to the worship of a God who dwells in each human heart, holds the world in the lap of immutable laws, and delights in the innocent happiness and the loving justice of all his children. He loves lost anything in the wreck of the creeds? If men have driven God out of the fabric of his life, has it not been to find him again in all things? If they have driven him out of the church, has it not been to find him again in the field and the woods? If they have driven him out of the Sabbath day, has it not been to find him again in all days? If they have lost faith in miracles, have they not gained faith in law, and if they reverse the laws of God and seek to obey them, is not that better than prayers that are uttered in ignorance of those laws?

ing the person which passeth all understanding. Both parties seemed to have partially agreed that in order to settle the dispute, they were willing to accept an outsider for president, but they have not yet found the right man to undertake the job, though they are willing to make the salary one hundred thousand dollars per year, the same as that now enjoyed by the present president. It was said that the offer was made to Mr. Cortelyou the present post master general, the same man who guided President Roosevelt's campaign to such a splendid victory. I am neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet, but I think I am safe in saying that Mr. Cortelyou would not accept it. I would not be at all surprised to learn that this lucky gentleman has a presidential bee in his bonnet and it is now fairly two to one that he will be the Republican candidate for the next presidential election. Now President Roosevelt has declared that he would not accept another nomination and the Republican party is looking around for a man who can give them the assurance of victory. I don't see another Republican in sight who has an equal chance with that of our post master general.

It is a pleasure to see our genial president back again, safe and sound and about the color of a Comanche. Ten bears but no grizzlies; they might be brown bears or cinnamon bears, not dangerous but good to eat when you are hungry. We welcome him from the wild and woolly west to the refined delights of an eastern civilization. He has two months vacation yet in store at Oyster Bay where he will cast off his buckskin hunting suit and exchange to a tuxedo. BROADBIM

FRED C. PATE

Funeral Director and Embalmer

The last best ministry we can bestow upon our friends after death is to prepare the body for burial with that tender care a mother feels for her babies first-born. The way in which these manifestations of love are expressed to-day is the product and glory of our Christian civilization. I am familiar with the most advanced practices in embalming. My facilities for conducting church funerals are complete. I have a car adapted to every need. I will give prompt personal attention to night or day calls, and I promise neatness and good management in the conduct of all this delicate work entrusted to my care.

SOUND COMMON SENSE
Avoid Extravagance; Avoid Cheapness in Buying of Clothes
There is a "happy mean" in clothes-buying. The old saying that "a fool and his money soon part," applies to the man who pays outrageous prices for his clothes. The other extreme is the man who buys shoddy clothing because it is cheap. The latter is the worse of the two because he gets nothing for his money but a bundle of rags made to resemble clothes. The common sense man realizes that high-grade, ready-made clothing is the sensible thing, and he can find it by coming here and asking for a K. N. & F. suit. He gets all that he could in a made-to-order suit, and more, and he saves at least one-half. $10 to $15 is a sensible price to pay, because it assures thorough and through Quality of Fabric and Hand Work.

Carpets
May is the month for carpets and this department of our store has been exceedingly busy. Why shouldn't we have your carpet trade—we carry the best stock, give you best prices—and make them for you in an hour's time.

Plenty of Reds, Greens, Blues and Plain Colors.

Paint
Now is the time to use it—don't wait until the dust and insects stick on the newly painted buildings and spoil the result you will get if you use B. P. S. paint. We don't know of any on the market that equals it for wearing and covering qualities. Painters who are using it say it works easiest and gives the best results of any they ever handled. Such has been the opinion of Mr. Spidel, Mr. Leo, Mr. Baylor, Mr. Hartzell, and every painter who has ever used Patterson-Sargents goods.
If you want to fix up any article in your house or give your floors a beautiful finish use
CHINA LAC
